SERGE LANCEN.

When you know that Serge Lancen, born in Paris in 1922, composed his first work at the piano at the age of four ('a "lullaby" which had the honour of being published) you can, without fear of error, classify him among the child prodigies; certainly a flattering label, but often disappointing in the future. However, Serge Lancen deserves better; maturity has made of him one of the first musicians of his generation. Of this fact, a First Prize in Composition, carried off from the Conservatoire de Paris in the class of the eminent Tony Aubin, as well as a Prix de Rome, are the official guarantees.

But these diplomas do not imply in Serge Lancen a work which is wholly oriented towards a rigid academic style: they are only the solid bases of a flawless craftsman, which allow him to attack the most varied forms of expression with an equal mastery. From the symphony to the ballet, passing by film music and chamber music, without omitting numerous orchestral pieces of a light character, Serge Lancen asserts the most substantial eclecticism through himself, the constant unity of his personality, of his aesthetics. Open to innovation and boldness of language, as long as they are "in the right place" in his musical theatre, he remains, without any consideration of school, a convinced adept of tonality and melody; his "Concert da Camera" for flute, his "Sinfonietta", his "Vahinée" for flute and piano, his "Valse Hollandaise" for trumpet and piano among many other eloquent witness.

Many times prizewinner of the Concours Francaise, Serge Lancen seems to be representative of the French spirit; everything clear and lucid.

His most important works: Two Concertos, Concerto for Harmonica, for flute, for strings; next compositions: Manhattan Symphony, Mini Symphonies, Kerkrade, Canne Kennedy, Petite Serenade and Hymne.
